

Hi, just a question. My position of Public Information Director was terminated at WVIA Public Television 100 WVIA WAY, Pittston, PA, this October. About a month later, the position was Public Information Director was filled with an intern who had been there while I was there- no search of any kind, no posting was ever done.

My concern is that this position was NEVER posted in any manner- not an ad, not the web, not in -house- this girl was simply slipped in. Since the station receives money from the federal govt, isn't this illegal? To my knowledge- every other open position there had always been advertised- but in this case, since a younger intern who was on site was "Given" the job with no posting it seems to smack of age or other discrimination- at the very least isn't this unethical to do? To not post a position?
